In the harsh and dry environment of Rotawewa, Trincomalee, resides R. Razmiya Beevi, a woman whose determination and resilience have transformed her life and empowered her community. From humble beginnings to becoming a successful poultry farmer, Razmiya's story is a testament to the transformative power of opportunity, education, and hard work.

Embracing Opportunity:

Razmiya, along with her husband and three children, navigated the challenges of living in a harsh environment. When the JSB project, supported by the Japanese government and technically assisted by UNDP, provided her with 20 chicks and a coop, Razmiya saw an opportunity to improve her family's livelihood through poultry farming.

Learning and Growing:

Initially uncertain about poultry farming, Razmiya seized the opportunity provided by the project to gain knowledge and training. With guidance from field implementers at Janathakshan, she honed her skills and developed a clear vision for her farm's success.

Turning Challenges into Success:

Despite facing challenges in the dry environment, Razmiya's perseverance paid off. Within a few months, her flock began laying eggs, producing 10 eggs per day. Razmiya wasted no time in selling these eggs, generating a steady income of 70 eggs per week. She also contributed to the brooding center established by the JSB project, further strengthening her ties to her community.

Dreams of Expansion:

With her newfound success, Razmiya dreams of expanding her poultry farm and diversifying into other livestock ventures. Her entrepreneurial spirit and determination to succeed continue to drive her towards greater heights of achievement.

Family Support and Nutritional Fulfillment:

Razmiya's journey would not have been possible without the unwavering support of her family. Together, they have overcome obstacles and celebrated successes, standing as a testament to the power of unity and resilience. Razmiya's efforts have not only improved her family's financial stability but have also fulfilled their nutritional needs through the regular supply of eggs.

A Bright Future Ahead:
